KICKSTARTING IT UP A NOTCH

Red Wagon Creamery tries a novel funding model BY SHANNON FINNELL

As failures go, this one was pretty successful. Red Wagon Creamery co-owner Emily Phillips says she knew that the ice cream cart probably wouldn't be able to raise $13,000 using the crowd-funding website Kickstarter, but she didn't realize the small, less than one-year-old company would make it to more than $3,000, either.

"It was a lot of fun," Phillips says, partially because the Kickstarter project let her see many of the donations shared on social media sites, and she says she takes a lot of pride in how many people were excited enough to see the business grow that they'd donate their own money.

Red Wagon's ice cream flavors range from the conventional to the surprising. The Smoked Salt Caramel No. 6 is a standby that sells out quite often. It's a rich, strongly flavored caramel that confuses the mouth — is this really ice cream you're eating? Because it tastes like sea salt caramel candy, and it's bold and delicious. Phillips says that she usually makes twice as much of it as any other flavor.

Frozen Goat is another favorite, and it's made with Wandering Goat's Café Femenino coffee. Red Wagon's Mint Chocolate Chip uses real mint that's local and organic, plus vegan chocolate. And there's always a sorbet on-hand, so bringing your favorite vegan is encouraged.

Other popular flavors include Phillips' attempts to work her way around the cheese wheel, with flavors like gouda and walnut or goat cheese with roasted pine nuts, rosemary and Blue Dog Meade swirled through. "It's nice to be able to highlight local products like Blue Dog Meade and local goat farms," Phillips says.

One notable Kickstarter donation came from Humphry Slocombe Ice Cream in San Francisco. "For them to notice us was great," Phillips says. "They're sort of the rock stars of ice cream."

Phillips and her husband, Stuart, envisioned using the Kickstarter money to buy a more efficient ice cream machine that would allow them to make more ice cream at a faster rate, cutting down the risk of ice crystals in the process. They had also hoped to buy an ice cream tricycle for selling ice cream on the go and a shed that would enable them to store the cart at Healthy Pet (also home to the gloriously tasty Party Cart) instead of taking it home every night.

No worries, though, ice cream fans. Since they weren't counting on the Kickstarter money, Phillips says Red Wagon will use other methods of creative fundraising to continue to grow. The latest news is that the custom-designed trike (made by Springfield company Wheelburro) is in the works and will debut in late May.

The Phillipses are devising a way to acquire the faster ice cream machinery, too. With all the days they've sold out of ice cream this year, they'll need it. Summer's coming.

With all this talk of funding, there is the larger question: How can a small, artisan ice cream cart survive the winter in Eugene's rainy, not-exactly-ideal-for-ice-cream weather?

"This winter has been interesting," Phillips says, as a gust of wind catches the fold-up chair by her cart and starts to whisk it away.

Red Wagon experimented by relocating to Midtown for a bit, trying to stay warm and dry, but when dinner service ceased, the Phillipses say they realized just how much ice cream they sell at night and moved back to the Healthy Pet a little earlier than they planned.

Phillips, a professional chef even before Red Wagon, says she thinks part of the reason Red Wagon is a business that can thrive in the winter is that she makes everything from scratch, even the ice cream base. "I think that makes a big difference in the quality of the ice cream," she says.

This summer they'll diversify their locales by adding Kesey Plaza and Willamalane to the mix, along with the Healthy Pet. Plus, they just confirmed a spot at the Lane County Farmers Market on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

For those Red Wagon fans who can't get by on a scoop alone, the cart sells pints, and pints are also available at eugenelocalfoods.com. They deliver, too. ■

The Best OF EUGENE

GET YOUR Groupon

The real deal about the latest craze in coupon clipping BY RICK LEVIN

It sounds like an industry insider's term barked on the set by porn directors, as in, "Hey, Ed, after we get the D.P. with Starla, let's try a group-on right before the money shot."

Technically speaking, however, Groupon is a noun, albeit a very mobile-seeming noun — one that may eventually enter English usage as a verb. "Honey, I'm hungry. What do you say we Groupon that pizza?"

All speculation aside, the phenomenon of Groupon has been with us for some time now. A compound term of "group" and "coupon" smashed together, Groupon was launched in 2008 and by April 2010 was valued at $1.35 billion.

The general idea behind Groupon and similar consumer perks like Living Social is twofold: First, a daily special is promoted, typically online, that promises a particular consumer good at a reduced price, like a $35 meal for $10. It seems too good to be true, like a Ponzi scheme.

The second part of the equation involves Groupon's benefit to retailers who take the hit up front for the potential benefit of increased patronage in the future, i.e. a Groupon user who's never been to your café but just wanted a super-cheap lunch ends up totally loving your Reuben and therefore returns every Tuesday, ready to pay full price for the sandwich.

Heidi Tunnell of Heidi Tunnell Catering Co. in Eugene has used both Groupon and Living Social. "I signed up for Groupon because I had done Living Social and I was happy with Living Social," Tunnell says. "I guess we thought it would draw new customers."

Tunnell says in both instances she drew in new customers, though ultimately she was happier with Living Social.

"Groupon was just someone over the phone," she says. "We set the terms and kept going back and forth because he kept trying to weasel things in there that I had said no to originally, then he kept trying to put them in there."

Cameron Langham, sales manager for Oakshire Brewing, says his company decided to go with Groupon "to better expose the public to Oakshire and our tasting room." All in all, Langham says he was satisfied with the couple of factors tipped the scales, Bertolone says. "For one, Living Social seemed to be more localized," he says, adding that "they were willing to come in and talk to us, and Groupon was primarily over the phone."

He says, all in all, Soriah's been pleased with the results. "It was cool," Bertolone says of working with Living Social. "When somebody experienced Café Soriah and used one of their coupons, they gave feedback pretty intimately."

Bertolone's comments about Living Social, then, present one side of the story — the best of all possible worlds, in corporate terms. Of course, "there were a fair share of deal seekers," he admits. On the other hand, "not many people think of us as an every night sort of restaurant, which we're trying to change," Bertolone results. "I didn't think we'd sell over 500 (Groupon vouchers) and we sold over 1,700," he explains.

In Langham's view, whether Groupon works for your business depends upon what type of business you run. "If I were a restaurant I probably wouldn't do it," he says, pointing out that, unlike a restaurant, Oakshire provides a product available in stores and on tap around town.

Another thing to consider, Langham says, is any business's capacity to deal with a tsunami of Groupon-gripping customers hitting a restaurant all at once, swamping the establishment. "I mean, we were hammered the first week," he says of Oakshire's Groupon experience. "If that happened in the restaurant business, I could see you turning off as many people as you turned on."

Jon Bertolone, floor manager at Café Soriah, says both Groupon and Living Social courted the restaurant. A explains, "so by getting people in there and seeing us, we appreciated that."

So, to Groupon or not to Groupon?

It would seem deals like Groupon and Living Social arrive at the nexus where industrial capitalism gives way to a hyper-consumerism fueled by the ethereal tides of digital commerce. Groupon is coupon cutting in the age of social networking — marketing at light speed with the forensic flash of target demographics and consumer taste delivered "intimately."

As Mr. Miyagi might say, you are free to access your personal Zen in the matter, to "group on, group off." Who doesn't like living socially?

Then again, Groupon's 2011 fourth-quarter report pegged a loss of $9.8 million, which might have inspired a few investors to Fuckoff altogether. ■

YOGURT MAKES THE WORLD GO 'ROUND

A scientific examination ANALYSIS BY SARA SHEAHAN

Sara is 10 years old with an insatiable sweet tooth. A discussion between classmates about which shop in the Eugene-Springfield area had the best self-serve frozen yogurt sparked in her the desire to determine just that. She set about visiting several locations, sampling the wares and rating her experience. Each one was judged on 13 categories from the number of toppings offered and the quality of the yogurt to the cleanliness of the space and the comfort of the seating. It was a long and sometimes arduous — but ultimately delicious — process. She called in family and friends for help, rides and funding. The graph displays her findings — Peach Wave won with 181 total points.

TSO MUCH AMERICAN BEEF

Lok Yaun has steak on Lok-down BY ANDY VALENTINE

Damn, steak is good. I know a lot of people take offense to it, and I'm not particularly partial to the methods by which these slabs of cooked flesh arrive before our famished eyes either, but when that first bite goes down it's pretty much bliss — at least until the check comes. "What the — ? Twenty-nine bucks for a piece of bloody carcass and a white, carrot-looking thing that kinda tasted like it was grown in Treebeard's stomach acid?"

There are the seemingly simple solutions to crises such as these — Shari's, Denny's, all that crap — but at the end of the day you'll still end up with a chewy, gristly steak that's worth about a quarter of the $12-$14 price you pay.

Out West 11th, past Chambers and Garfield, lies a popular Chinese food restaurant that most diners probably wouldn't consider frequenting for the steak. That's right, Lok Yaun Restaurant has steak — after all, the sign does advertise American food. So if your husband or friend or roommate or whoever has a hankering for Chinese food, but you feel like slipping a big old piece of American raised, slaughtered and prepared beef down your gullet, you have options.

At only $8.25 for a fairly large steak that's actually cooked to order (not just medium no matter what you ask for) you can't really complain, and neither can your wallet. The whole package sports either salad, French bread, baked potato, French fries or pork fried rice.

I probably wouldn't order a side of rice stuffed with yet more meat, but hey, if you're feeling particularly carnivorous, then why not?

If saving money is your bag then you're not really going to have any problems at Lok Yaun. Indeed, the entire menu is chock-full of meals priced below $10 or in the low double-digit range, and this includes the "American favorites" (sirloin steak, chicken-fried steak, breaded veal, fish and chips, shrimp and chips, and chicken strips and chips). Sadly there don't seem to be many fries on the menu — just good old English chips — but with each and every one of these staples of our culinary culture costing $8.25, you hardly have grounds to get your knickers in a twist.

All kidding aside, the food is actually tasty, and the fact that Lok Yaun provides options for stubborn ethnocentrists is cool. There's also a gluten-free menu and a kids' menu where the most expensive dish (which happens to be another "American favorite") only costs $5.50. That means it keeps your offspring and your pocket full, which definitely isn't a bad trade-off.

Fairly un-customarily, Lok Yaun does not deliver. Unfortunately that means you can't get a steak straight to your house, which would be pretty much bananas. On the plus side it has food to go, so you can drive around town eating a breaded veal cutlet, ride the bus while eating a top sirloin or maybe even walk your dog while chomping on a chicken-fried steak.

Lok Yaun has been a candidate in the Top 100 Chinese Restaurant awards held annually in Santa Clara, Calif. Beyond that being really impressive, it's another factor that makes it surprising to find that it hasn't given into greed during the recession: The economics of Lok Yaun's business model (which totally includes steak) remain steadfast — dirt cheap and cost-effective. ■

Lok Yaun is located at 2630 W. 11th Ave., for more information visit www.lokyaunrestaurant.com or call 345-7448.

BIGGER BELLY, RUNNING RABBIT

Popular Eugene bistros move into new digs BY TED SHORACK

Where the Old World meets the Willamette Valley with beef tongue, pork collar, duck leg confit and short ribs: This has been the draw for fans of two local favorites, Rabbit Bistro and Belly. The restaurants have managed to attract loyal patrons despite the limitations of their current locations. Now, both businesses are moving downtown, and in the process becoming bigger and better.

Rabbit Bistro has been tucked away in south Eugene since 2009, when it took the place of Asado Latin Bistro between Market of Choice and Laughing Planet at 29th and Willamette. With a narrow dining area and a bar around the corner, the space has never quite worked for the owners and chef.

Co-owner Cory Stamp says they were very grateful to have obtained the spot at Woodfield Station that they're vacating, but it really wasn't designed to accommodate what they wish to bring to the table.

"It was never meant to be doing what we're doing in it," Stamp says. "There's a lot of hindrances for us being here."

Chef Gabriel Gil has set out to make Rabbit a place with a quality menu in a relatively casual setting, a notion known as bistronomy. Menu options range from mussels and frites to a hanger steak or buffalo brisket.

In providing these sorts of dinner options, Gil has struggled against the current location's diminutive walk-in and cramped kitchen. "I don't have a lot of space to put my products," he says. "I really just have enough to make the dishes that I make."

This in part led to a "no substitutions" rule. But Gil is expecting to be able to be more lenient in the new space in the Broadway Commerce Center at East Broadway and Willamette.

THE NEW BELLY LOCATION

"We have a chance to go somewhere and do something that we get to design and that will be more ideal for the type of service we want to have," Stamp says.

Belly owner Brendan Mahaney opened the popular restaurant at its current 5th Avenue location in 2008. Belly's revamped digs at 30 E. Broadway, not far from the new Rabbit, contain a good two-thirds more space than the current location, Mahaney says.

Opening shop next to Voodoo Donuts, Belly hopes to see an increase in foot traffic from the nearby Saturday Market and surrounding office buildings. Currently a work in progress, Mahaney says remodeling is about halfway done. "We're hoping to open April 23rd," he says.

This new location opens the door to greater culinary diversity. "We can expand our menu," Mahaney says, with "a broader variety of options."

A larger bar and a lounge area are also in the offing. "Just a more inviting space for our customers," Mahaney says. "We just look forward to being a part of the downtown Eugene scene."

Once its up and ready to go, Belly plans on celebrating spring and the beginning of summer, utilizing fresh halibut, fresh salmon and local produce from the Willamette Valley.

Mahaney will operate a full-time taqueria out of the old Belly location, building on Monday's taco night and the crowds it draws with the smell of frying carnitas. ■

THE SKY IS FALLING

But hey, there's beer BY SARAH DECKER & SHANNON FINNELL

If, by the pure definition of things, a brewpub's main focus is its beer, an extremely close second at Falling Sky is the food. It doesn't have a lengthy menu, but what they have is fantastic.

If you are of the carnivorous persuasion, there is the ever-classic burger, but if you have yet to sample the pork carnitas tacos, you are missing out on one of the great dishes in Eugene. In fact, what this place does with the pork it serves up — both in the tacos and the pork-belly Cuban — is divine.

The selection of salads, daily soups and comfort foods vary by the day — and by season. The just-concluded winter menu featured a root vegetable potpie and a falafel patty served up as a burger and cooked to perfection.

Early spring at Falling Sky means new seasonal ingredients and a new menu. The pork stays on, and so does the superfood-tastic kale Caesar salad. The menu also includes Pacific cod ceviché, duck nuggets with ginger plum sauce, a garbanzo and barley field burger and chilaquiles.

The “mini-me” in your family can try out her own mini menu that reads like it was designed to stuff the gullet of a picky young eater. Classics like grilled cheese, hot dogs, hamburgers and an organic PB&J? These folks know their target market. Plus, if you want to start the next generation drinking early, there's cider porter ice cream for dessert.

For the non-drinkers, Falling Sky also makes its own sodas. We tried two different flavors — the carrot ginger and the cran-blu green peppercorn. We can honestly say, without hesitation, that the latter was possibly the best soda we've ever had. The flavors blended perfectly, not too sweet and not too overpowering, then finished with just the tiniest hint of pepper. It was insanely refreshing.

On top of all the delicious pub grub, Falling Sky has a top-notch beer selection. If you're there for beer, you might as well order the flight and taste all six of Falling Sky's concoctions.

We were wild about the Bare Hands Bitter, which won us over by being genuinely bitter — without having a bitterness that completely overpowered the flavor. The blonde we tasted was fantastic as well, a little more bitter than a lot of blondes but still light and a great summer beer.

The pale ales we tasted impressed us because we're not hops-crazy enough to be fans of a lot of pales. The hops were there all right, but these are balanced beers that even hops-haters should give a shot.

That brings us to the Pouring Porter, which was like a rich, smooth dessert in a glass — everything a porter should be.

Whether you're a food-lover or a beer-lover, Falling Sky is packed with a rotation of treats right up your alley. The next time a craving for either hits you, we heartily recommend it for delights in both. ■

THE COOLEST THING IN TOWN

Springfield works on a foodie new attraction BY SHANNON FINNELL

In some circles, on some topics, some people make fun of Springfield. But Eugene's neighbor to the east has some pretty sweet attributes, as anyone who's spent a day on foot in the city can tell you. And Springfield is getting even more flavorful with the addition of Sprout!, a community food hub set to open in the fall of 2012.

The Neighborhood Economic Development Corporation (NEDCO) has long been a positive, innovative feather in Springfield's cap, but Sprout! has the potential to make Eugeneans drool.

NEDCO Assistant Director Sarai Johnson says the project, in the soon-to-be remodeled building that was First Christian Church in Springfield, will have three main components: a year-round farmers market, an industrial central kitchen and an expansion of NEDCO's Hatch business incubator program.

"So far we're in the design and development phase," Johnson says, which involves making a plan to modify the building while preserving some of its architectural features. Johnson says the plan is to keep the "classic sanctuary style" of the church while knocking down some walls to make a modern kitchen. The remodeling will also provide space for at least two anchor businesses.

Sprout!'s kitchen, which will be able to accommodate up to five businesses simultaneously, is the focus of many of the renovations. And even though it's months from opening, other Springfield business owners are already singing its praises. John Patrick, who owns Devour, says the kitchen would have been an incredible resource for him when he was starting his business.

"Right now there's nothing quite like Sprout!" Patrick says. High health standards make finding affordable kitchen space a challenge for new business owners focused on the bottom line, he says, and that's "a daunting task for anyone who's going to open a street food business or a restaurant."

Patrick says he thinks that having Sprout! at the old church on 4th and A will create a "commercial Mecca" for vendors in the area, cultivating a whole new central location for Springfield and Eugene foodies.

Leda Hermecz has grown her business with the help of NEDCO's Hatch program, and she says she's excited about Sprout! because it will be able to specialize in helping new businesses related to food. Hermecz owns Food Industry Resources for Sustainable Transitions (FIRST), which helps food businesses reduce waste in ways that increase profits.

Part of what Hatch has done for Hermecz and FIRST is provide affordable office space downtown, but Hermecz says that what's been even better for her is the support that she's received when meeting with NEDCO staff to talk about ideas and obstacles. "That's where I feel like every cent of rent is going to way more than office space because I get that support," she says.

Johnson says that as Sprout! grows, she and her NEDCO colleagues hope to offer more and more of that support to food-centered businesses, through avenues like workshops and one-on-one work with businesses, and by helping clients access safe loan products that won't take advantage of them.

And that sort of support makes all the difference to businesses like FIRST. Hermecz says, "I feel lucky to be in Springfield." ■

ANGELS IN THE RYE

New restaurant brings bit of Old World elegance BY SARAH DECKER

Times are tough for opening up a new restaurant, a fact known all too well by Wendy Watson, Jeffrey Passerotti and Kiyallah Heatherstone, the owners of Rye, one of Eugene's newest bistros.

"There's just no bank money available to restaurants, period," says Passerotti.

That little fact didn't stop this trio of longtime friends and restaurant lifers from realizing their dreams. They opened shop without taking a dime from the bank or any city funding. Instead, the group used their own money supplemented by private donations from a group they like to call their "angels."

"It should be one word — foodanddrink."

RYE CO-OWNER WENDY WATSON

And "not those big corporate angels," Watson says. "These are people who have been our customers for years."

The three of them set about putting that money to work by completely revamping the old Bridge location on Franklin Boulevard, doing the renovations and decorating largely on their own. The work they've put in becomes apparent the moment you pass through Rye's iconic doors with their distinctly Eugene accent. Anyone familiar with the building in its prior incarnations is in for a real surprise. The interior has been transformed into a warm, cozy and inviting place.

The furniture was picked up here and there, sometimes from as far away as Portland, yet blends together as if by design. The coppertop tables are at once rugged and elegant. And the collection of prints hanging is an eclectic blend found, literally, Passerotti says, "at Goodwill, St. Vinnie's and our garages."

What was intended to be a mishmash, with a "Grandma's house" feel, ended up being a more refined yet no less homey place.

"We kind of want to sit around and have a drink and hang out, too," Watson says.

The name Rye makes perfect sense when you walk through those doors and see the bar stretched before you. A fine collection of rye whiskey lines the shelf, and whiskey barrels are stacked throughout the space.

The food menu — mostly European influence with some Americana thrown in — is slim, for now. Currently, Rye offers up your hearty, staple winter fare, but all that is set to change soon and, as promised by co-owner and executive chef Passerotti, frequently. One particularly noteworthy aspect of the menu, however, is that no entrée item costs more than $20. And the selection of drinks — from pre- to post-prohibition cocktails, as well as beer and wine — is likewise moderately priced, not to mention paired beautifully with the menu's offerings.

"You cook with wine, you cook with the alcohols and the vermouth behind the bar," Passerotti says. "It's all integrated."

The three restaurateurs agree that "food and drink" is somewhat a working motto.

"It should be like one word," says Watson, "foodanddrink."

Patrons should feel free to bring their own bottles of wine, seeing as the current selection at Rye is basic, but limited.

"The food that Jeff puts out is fantastic," Heatherstone says. "So bring in some good wine that goes with it. There's nothing like a good glass of wine to go with a great meal."

As the team gets comfortable in their new kitchen, fine tuning what is already a steady flow, they have but one goal: "We're going to stay within the concept of being that little place that you can go and get a good bite of food, a decent drink, hang out and feel comfortable going there," Passerotti says. ■

FROM THAILAND, WITH LOVE

Rare dishes from the land of pad Thai BY DANTE ZUÑIGA-WEST

When it comes to the economics of supply and demand, Thai food isn't a cuisine lacking in Eugene. But the folks over at Som Tum Thai Bistro are bringing something new to the equation.

"A lot of Thai food here isn't as bold," says Som Tum owner Avieta Kaokept. "People just want the usual things like pad Thai with peanut sauce and things like that."

A Eugenean by way of Bangkok, Kaokept is no newcomer to world of Thai restaurants. Her family has been feeding Eugene their nation's cuisine for years. In fact, if you love Thai food, it's more than likely you've dined at an establishment run by Avieta's kin. Her brother, who goes by B, owns Ta Ra Rin, and her parents, Vic and Bangon, operate Chao Pra Ya. Each of these restaurants offers tasty Thai delicacies, but the magic coming out of the kitchen at Som Tum is an exciting addition to the family's legacy.

"What she (Avieta) has done here is make the stuff you'd find in food carts over in Thailand," says waiter Michael Fitzgerald. He notes that Som Tum offers the traditional fare — everything from your killer pad Thai to a delicious bubble tea — but then points out the rare gems for which this place is becoming known.

For the adventurous there's the oxtail soup, consisting of slow-cooked oxtail boiled in tomatoes, celery, fried scallions and onions. Tempting appetizers include the tod man, fried fishcakes made from talapia, red curry paste, green beans, kaffir and basil. These scrumptious patties are even more of a treat when dipped in the accompanying sauce of onion, cucumber and sweet chili.

"I wanted to make the things people don't usually know about when they go to eat Thai food," Kaokept says.

One of the most impressive looking and mouth-watering plates on the menu has the restaurant's name all over it, literally. The som tum is a salad that combines four different flavors of lime, as well as fish sauce, Thai chili and palm sugar. Shredded green papaya, cherry tomatoes, carrots, green beans and peanuts are all up in the mix as well — this is the dream dish to push on your vegetarian friends.

It's a stroke of chokdee (good luck) to have access to such great Thai food in Eugene, and one of the more attractive aspects of Som Tum is prices that won't break your pocketbook. Short of hitting up the food carts of the country once known to Westerners as Siam, this might be the closest one can get to a true immersion in hard-to-find Thai cuisine. We suggest going all out, washing down your meal with a bottle of Singha — just to make it official. ■

NOLI'S Bolognese Sauce

yields 1.5 gal

2.5 lb ground beef
2.5 lb ground pork
1 cup olive oil
2 large carrots finely chopped
4 celery stalks finely chopped
2 yellow onions finely chopped
1/2 cup chopped garlic
1 cup dry red wine, possibly Chianti
2 tbsps dry herbs (sage, rosemary, oregano)
1/2 cup chopped fresh basil
1 lb tomato paste
3 lb crushed tomatoes
salt and fresh ground pepper to taste

In a large saucepan combine olive oil, carrots, celery and onion and cook gently for about 10 minutes. Add garlic and after few minutes add meats and seasoning. When meat is ready (about 20 minutes) add wine and reduce liquid for few minutes. Add tomato paste, crushed tomatoes and fresh basil; simmer over very low heat for at least 1 hour. When sauce is ready, toss with any variety of fresh or dry pasta.

THAI PACIFIC RIM CUISINE

take in summer

fresh ingredients

A confluence of cuisine from countries located along the edge of the Pacific Ocean, Sabai reflects the exotic flavors we've come to love.

With an emphasis on fresh ingredients,
simply prepared with care,
thoughtfulness,
and culinary precision,
the menu is a mingling of Pacific Rim flavors with an emphasis on time-honored
Thai Dishes.

SABAI is where you can experience friendly, healthy, authentic Pacific Rim Cuisine with a Northwest twist and everyday affordability.

drink in summer

enticing refreshments

Featuring imported beers,
local micro brew, spirits
and Northwest wines, Sabai is where locals
and visitors alike
come for lunch and dinner or just
to relax with family, friends and colleagues
over drinks and appetizers.

THAI PACIFIC RIM CUISINE

breathe in summer

dining on the plaza

Summer brings warmth, flowers and dining on Eugene's only piazza style courtyard at Oakway Center.
Breathe in the fresh summer air, sip Northwest wines and enjoy the exotic flavors of the Pacific Rim.

SABAI is the Thai word used to describe the surrounding as comfortable and relaxing, as well as personal well being, comfort and happiness.

TODD COOPER

THE HUMBLE BEAGLE'S

Shakshuka

olive oil
1 yellow onion, chopped
8 garlic cloves, minced
1 tsp ground cumin
1 tsp ground coriander
1 tbsp paprika
pinch of red chili pepper flakes
1 28 oz can whole peeled tomatoes
8 eggs
1/2 cup feta
2 tbsp chopped flat-leaf parsley kosher salt and fresh ground pepper to taste bread or pita for bowl cleaning

Coat large skillet with oil and heat over medium-high heat. Add onions and a pinch of salt and caramelize. Add garlic, cumin, coriander, chili pepper and paprika, and cook, stirring frequently, until garlic begins to color.

Roughly chop the tomatoes, then add them along with their liquid to skillet along with 1/2 cup water, reduce heat to medium-low, and simmer, stirring occasionally, until thickened slightly. (Sauce should remain fairly "soupy.") Season with salt and pepper.

Crack eggs over sauce so that eggs are evenly distributed across sauce's surface. Cover skillet and cook until yolks are just set. Using a spoon, baste the whites of the eggs with tomato mixture, being careful not to disturb the yolk. Sprinkle shakshuka with feta and parsley and serve with bread or pita for dipping.
